21Enjoy a moment of reflection on the past and the future at this collection exhibition that touches on the history and identity of beauty.

The most important role of a museum is the collection. A collection exhibition is a place where the museum displays and displays the works that it has collected and owned. Unlike special exhibitions and planned exhibitions, showcasing what has been collected thus far is a place where you can feel what the museum places importance on and what it wants to cherish in the future. The much-anticipated exhibition "Collection Exhibition 3" will be held at the 21st Century Museum of Contemporary Art, Kanazawa from February 1st (Sat) to May 11th (Sun).

The museum's collection activities began in 2000, before the museum opened, and new works are collected every year without fail based on the research and studies of curators. The collection, which had about 200 pieces at the time of the museum's opening, has now reached about 4,200 pieces, and the collection can be said to represent the history of 21 Bijutsu and its identity. The work to be exhibited this time is a large-scale work by Rafael Lozano-Hemmer that uses about 300 light bulbs, which will be exhibited for the first time in 13 years. The ceiling of the exhibition room, which was exposed due to the Noto Peninsula earthquake on January 1, 2024, will be covered with about 300 incandescent light bulbs. In addition to "Eight Hair Bundles in Flames" by Rebecca Horn, a world-renowned German artist who passed away last fall, which uses eight knives and brushes, a metal structure and a motor, you can also see two of the museum's selected early acquisitions, Giuseppe Penone's "Propagation" and Francesco Clemente's "Self-Portrait with Shoes and Glasses," as well as works by deceased artists Koji Nakazono and Yasuo Yasuo, who were newly acquired in 2024.
